The 9/11 Commission Report

A Contemporary Primary Source

Abstract

The assignment task was to select a contemporary primary source that could be essential for future generations to understand the current era of American history. The primary source that I chose was The 9/11 Commission Report, which highlights the lack of coordination and sharing of information between different military departments, and how higher management was often unenthusiastic to taking action against Al-Qaeda, which eventually attacked the Twin Towers.

Goyal, Anish

AP United States History

Anslie Spitler

May 10, 2023

Contents

1   Who, What, Where, When, and Why?

The 9/11 Commission Report is a primary source that provides a comprehensive account of the events leading up to the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks, the attacks themselves, and their aftermath. Published in 2004 by the National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States, the report was the result of an extensive investigation that included interviews with more than 1,200 people and a review of millions of pages of documents. The report is a valuable primary source for future generations seeking to understand the impact of the 9/11 attacks on American society, politics, and foreign policy. It provides a detailed narrative of the events leading up to the attacks, including the intelligence failures and missed opportunities to prevent them. The report also outlines the government's response to the attacks, including the creation of the Department of Homeland Security and the War on Terror. The 9/11 Commission Report is significant not only for its historical value but also for its impact on contemporary American politics and policy. The report's recommendations led to significant changes in national security policy, including the creation of the Director of National Intelligence and the National Counterterrorism Center.